STAFF RECOMMENDATIONS: Favorite Example of a Literary Trope Done Right

Close Quarters and The Reluctant Hero Trope: Voyage of the Damned by Frances White

This is a fantasy spin on Agatha Christie's classic And Then There Were None. The main character, Ganymedes (Dee), joins his fellow Blessed on a celebratory journey marking the new generation's reign, but he's hiding one big secret: he's not really Blessed, and wants nothing more than to escape his fabricated destiny. I LOVE the Close Quarters trope, and I think this book nailed it! It was so much fun.

— Danielle Heiert, adult/teen services programmer

Reverse Order Trope: All The Missing Girls by Megan Miranda

This is a mystery told in reverse from day 15 to day 1. It's so suspenseful and satisfying. It definitely keeps you on your toes from the first chapter.

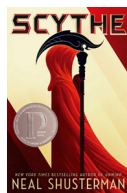

— Dakota Guilkey, information services assistant

Losing the Ability to Run Horror Trope: Nestlings by Nat Cassidy

With the help of his personal experience and the women in his life, Nat Cassidy crafts beautiful and suspenseful books that give a voice to often underrepresented women's issues like middle age and postpartum depression/psychosis. The "losing the ability to run" trope is done masterfully because the main character lives in a tall building and is in a wheelchair. It is utterly terrifying!

— Shelby Vornberger, children's services programmer

The Questionable Utopia Trope: Scythe by Neal Shusterman

It's a book that does a good job exploring the line between utopia and dystopia with unique worldbuilding. Without revealing too much of the story, it's exciting, action packed, and also a thought provoking look at the value and meaning of life.

— Isabel duBarry, children's services programmer

Dayton Library Pop Up

Come see the library at the Dayton Community Center (625 2nd Ave., Dayton, KY) on Friday, Sept. 20 from 9 am-noon.

Check out books, enjoy a story time at 10 am, receive technology assistance and get crafty. There will also be a computer with printing and scanning available.

The pop-up will return the third Friday in both October and November from 9 am-noon.

Autumn with Austen, continued from the cover

The three-part series is similar (albeit shorter) to last year's Shaking Up Shakespeare. Like the latter, Autumn with Austen aims to shake up the ways in which attendees view classic literature. Danielle Heiert, the Cold Spring Branch's adult/teen services programmer, is an alumna of Northern Kentucky University.

"I saw how much everyone loved the Shakespeare series and I wanted to keep up that relationship with the English department," says Heiert. "I know a lot of the professors' personal favorites to teach about, so I wanted to bring in some new professors to talk about the works they love!"

One of those professors is Dr. Andrea Gazzaniga, who also acts as NKU's English department chair. Dr. Gazzaniga will open the series on Thursday, Sept. 26 from 6:30-8 pm with a classroom-style discussion of Persuasion.

"Austen was so perceptive about human relationships," says Dr. Gazzaniga via email. "All her novels teach us how to discern good people from bad people; how to read red flags to identify and thus avoid toxic personalities or how to read a person's sometimes small, almost imperceptible actions as indicative of their good character."

Dr. Gazzaniga goes on to say that she thinks we're drawn to Austen "because, despite being set in a seemingly remote time period in a world far removed from our own, we can see a correlation between her characters and the people we know in our own lives. We all know a Mr. Collins, an Elizabeth Bennett, a Mr. Elton or an Emma Woodhouse."

Dr. Gazzaniga has published essays on nineteenth-century British poetry and Victorian women writers. Heiert says Gazzaniga's passion for Austen is clear; patrons can expect an engaging talk. The first fifteen to register for the discussion will receive a free copy of Persuasion to keep.

Next up is a renaissance dance workshop with Kentucky Shakespeare on Tuesday, Oct. 29 from 6:30-8 pm. Learn and perform the popular social dances of the past including Pavane, Gathering Peascods and more.

A tea party and modern movie adaptation will close out the series on Thursday, Nov. 14 from 6:30-8:30 pm.

For more information, visit cc-pl.org/autumn-with-austen.

Signature Series: The Last Glory Days of Baseball with Keith O'Brien

Signature Series is back on Friday, Sept. 6 at 7 pm. Held at the Carrico/Fort Thomas Branch, hear from author Keith O'Brien, who will discuss his latest book: Charlie Hustle: The Rise and Fall of Pete Rose, and the Last Glory Days of Baseball.

Released this spring as an instant bestseller, the nonfiction novel delves into the life and work of infamous Cincinnati Reds player Pete Rose. O'Brien— who has been a PEN/ESPN finalist for Literary Sportswriting and longlisted for the Andrew Carnegie Medal for Excellence in Nonfiction—used FBI interviews, court records and press coverage in writing Charlie Hustle.

A book signing with refreshments will follow O'Brien's talk. If you can't make it in the evening, there will be a shorter afternoon sneak peek at 2 pm. Register at cc-pl.org/signature-series.

History of Trains in Newport with Train Aficionado Jonathan Higgins

Get a dose of niche local history at the Newport Branch! Self-proclaimed "Train Aficionado" Jonathan Higgins will give a presentation from 6-8 pm on Monday, Sept. 16 about the robust railway system that once existed in Newport.

Higgins runs a blog of the same name where he writes about his adventures exploring cities with both active and abandoned railways in the United States.

You can also catch him on YouTube at "Train Aficionado Live," which updates monthly. Register at cc-pl.org/events.
